MOOD: 🥰 crushy

MUSIC: John Mayer - Say (What You Need To Say)

...not getting any less terrible.

Today's music included Tom Waits and Michael Jackson. She totally cracks me up.

(Also, I balance a lot better on my left foot than on my right. I guess I'm really not as ambidextrous (ambipodrous?) as I thought. Or maybe I just need more practice standing on one foot.)

And in conclusion? Hey. Doughnuts!

This looks like a good idea.

This.

Little guy's not bad.

The Michael Jackson (scary dude) was funny. It was "Man in the Mirror."

Yoga studio? Walls of mirrors. See? Funny.

(Also, kind of freaky. Okay, a lot freaky. But you get used to it eventually. Sortof. Or learn not to look.)

Michael Jackson, freaky? No kidding.

Or did you mean wall-of-mirrors is freaky? Mirrors can be very helpful, especially when I'm trying to figure out why the instructor does things so gracefully while I fall flat on my butt. (A position which, alas, I am all too familiar with.) The tricky thing, of course, is to remember that while mirrors can be very accurate, they also invariably show things the reverse of how they really are. Sometimes that's a feature; sometimes that's a bug.

Also, those who find multiple mirrors freaky should not read today's XKCD webcomic. The same for folks with allergies to Douglas Hofstadter.

Maybe it was punishment for your class not working hard enough? (Musical equivalent of a rolled up newspaper)

So, weds night? I made the switch from doing everything that I'd learned in Weng Tsun right handed, to doing it left handed.

It was like being a noob all over again. Got thrown around by a girl half my age and half my mass.

I have no ego. I have no ego. I have no ego. I have no ego...

Your lack of ego and my lack of ego can do lunch.

His ego and your id, perhaps? Can my superego come along? (I've been told by friends of mine that my superego is charming...yes, I have weird friends.)
